Just like a fortune cookie we have message inside us dying to come out: The FOMO is strong.

We are the new sovereigns and heirs of a totally messed up kingdom, that's longing for a shattered past and stumbling into an uncertain future.

No wonder it's the present we enjoy the most. The bird in hand. The present tense. Our time is now.

The riches we embrace are invisible, the pleasures we seek are not material. We don't want to have it all, we want to live it all. So when they say we're the first generation who won't do as well as our parents, nothing could be further from the truth. We are the first generation who will enjoy life more than they did.

All this time living beyond our means has given us our greatest strength: freedom. And we're not about to give it up. We have no use for this simple world we inherit, so we shall create our own. A new place, made to fit our needs, under our own rules. One where we don't need anyone's permission, and have nothing to apologize for.

One whose flag of diversity, spontaneity and pleasure blows proudly in the wind. One in which we are free to be chaotic, flawed, random, complex and unclassifiable, lords and masters of our own happiness.
